Election fever

Charlotte Masters, Elizabeth Nelson, Martha Parkinson and Hazel Lockwood participated in the Nicki Campbell Radio 5 Live debate on Wednesday 12th June: an event organised as part of the run-up to the general election. The debate provided a dynamic platform for students to voice their opinions on several critical topics.

One of the hot topics tackled during the 'Teen 24' debate was the issue of mobile phone usage among young people. Our students presented well-researched arguments, highlighting both the advantages and disadvantages of mobile phone use in educational settings. They discussed how mobile phones can be valuable tools for learning, providing access to educational resources and enabling communication. However, they also addressed concerns about potential distractions and the need for balanced regulation to ensure phones do not hinder academic performance.

The debate on the impact of social media was particularly vibrant, with students expressing diverse perspectives. They acknowledged social media's role in connecting people, fostering creativity, and raising awareness about important issues. Conversely, they also delved into the darker side, discussing issues like cyberbullying, misinformation, and the pressure to conform to unrealistic standards. The students emphasised the importance of digital literacy and mental health support to navigate the complexities of social media.

The involvement of under-18s in politics sparked a passionate discussion among our Year 12 participants. They explored the idea of lowering the voting age, arguing that younger individuals should have a say in decisions that affect their future. The debate also covered the concept of national service, with students weighing the potential benefits of fostering a sense of civic duty and community engagement against the challenges and ethical considerations of mandatory service.

“Participating in the Nicki Campbell Radio 5 Live debate was an invaluable experience for our Year 12 students”, says Mr Finnigan who accompanied the students. “It not only allowed them to engage with pressing societal issues but also honed their public speaking and critical thinking skills. The feedback from the debate moderators and listeners was overwhelmingly positive, praising our students for their articulate and thoughtful contributions.”
