Dissertation and thesis writing

On Friday, Year 13 will be looking at techniques for dissertation and thesis writing.

The Academic Phrasebank is a useful resource used by academic writers who need to report their research work. It was designed primarily for academic and scientific writers who are non-native speakers of English. However, students will find much of the material helpful. It aims to provide examples of some of the phraseological 'nuts and bolts' of writing organised according to the main sections of a research paper or dissertation. Other phrases are also listed under more general titles of academic writing. Both the phrases and the headings can help students think about the content and organisation of their own writing. Alternatively, the phrases can be incorporated into their writing where appropriate.

The items in the Academic Phrasebank are mostly content neutral and generic in nature. This means using any of the terms won't constitute plagiarism in any way.
